MOVING DINÉ EDUCATION FORWARD

Dr. Begay stated the first order of business for the Navajo Nation is to ensure its schools are safe, especially amid the COVID-19 pandemic.

“Once we have school buildings that meet the life-safety regulatory requirements, codes, guidelines, and standards of [the Occupational Safety and Health Administration], the Federal Government, the tribal government, and state school safety and security measures, we can begin instilling highly effective [and] highly performing school practices on Navajo land,” Dr. Begay said.

Dr. Begay stated the challenges facing Navajo adults could be traced back to a weak education system, and those experiences and cultural teachings have much to offer for current and future students, “Our future generation will no doubt come upon dire challenges wherein sovereign cultural selfhood will once again hold sway over the merciless life challenges.”

However, Dr. Begay added the educational divides and inequalities in Navajo education can be repurposed towards an empowering education with tribal funds and resources.

“I welcome our public to the new futuristic education for our future generation, an undertaking that will challenge and bring out the best in every one of us, for unity does make for accomplishing great deeds,” Dr. Begay wrote.
